Research

Fact-finding group visits, sponsored by corporations, can help The Eurasia Center better understand the unique economic, political, and social climate of Japan, explain its past successes and setbacks, and assess its future progress and needs. The Eurasia Center, multinational corporations (MNCs), non-governmental organizations (NGOs), the academic community, the political arena, and Japan itself can all gain valuable insight from these re-search activities.

The Eurasia Center On Japan

Lecture Series, Roundtables, and Symposia

The Eurasia Center has a reputation for its thought-provoking lecture series and roundtable discussions that focuses on issues relating to modern Japan today - security concerns involving China, the Korean Peninsula, and nuclear proliferation; economic development and technological superiority in the face of its current recession; environmental policy relating to the post-Kyoto Protocol; and the political, economic, and social ramifications of post-World War II era. These debates foster greater learning and understanding of Japan's past achievements, as well as future implications for the nation itself, as well as the East Asian region as a whole.

Cultural Events

The Eurasia Center's cultural activities: hosting students and professionals from Japan; to learning about key inspirational and historical Japanese figures to promoting books, arts, and movie screenings that accurately depict Japanese culture and showcase the beauty of the country's natural landscapes; and updating its online bulletin of Japan-related cultural events, will serve to educate the citizens of America on the traditions, customs, and trends that set Japan apart from the rest of the world, thus promoting greater interest and dialogue. Such endeavors establish stronger relational ties between the citizens of United States and Japan, and lead to further growth in tourism and foreign investments.

Internships

The Eurasia Center plans to engage international American-based companies in the banking, energy, automotive, and marketing industries, as well as media agencies and NGOs with interest in Japan to sponsor internship placement programs that will train highly-qualified interns from Japan and the United States to research and study developments in U.S.-Japanese relations. This program fosters a mutually-gaining relationship between American organizations and Japan as such opportunities allow the two countries to cooperate and learn more closely with each other, which Americans can then use to better assess and understand the market needs of Japan and to engineer a more effective marketing strategy that matches the culture and mindset of Japan, and vice versa.

The Eurasia Center has hosted a number of Japanese interns over the past few years.
